Charles H. Webb, a native of the Tenth Election District, a product of the public schools, an intelligent young poll worker, who had the east side of Cherry street, the west side of Water street and all between to count, was accompanied by Officer Timothy Ring, an Evenium World reporter and an artist on his rounds.

Then there was Mrs. Bridget Buckley, who supposed it was "going on to seventy years" since she was born in Ireland, and Timothy and Honora, middle-aged children, born in New York, and three boarders in the front half of No. 15, top floor to councrate.

The party then descended through the house and found thirty-one residents all told. At almost every door the enumerator was welcomed as a visiting friend and everybody addressed the policeman as "Tim."

At No. 17 the visitors found John Healey, middle aged, who came from Dublin when a boy poor as poverty, but who is now the owner of Nos. 17, 10 and 21 of O'Connor alley, a rear tenement house of five stories, in admirable condition where twenty-three families live.
